Students For Liberty's Work and our Theory of Social Change

During the selection of leaders, we look for kind, humble, and knowledgeable pro-liberty students. A leader for SFL is a volunteer that we accepted and trained. We focus on quality over quantity. Our leadership training programs develop our students into effective organizers, thinkers, communicators, and better overall advocates for liberty. We have the right ideas, but we also have to be the better people.

We encourage our leaders to propose new and innovative techniques to spread the ideas of liberty. We support our best leaders in the implementation of such projects. Examples of previous student-led projects include pro-liberty-themed festivals, free market start-up incubators, regional conferences, film, art, music, and fundraisers for communities in the US and abroad.

After their time at university, our leaders continue to spread the ideas of liberty while holding influential positions in business, academia, journalism, non-profits, and politics. Our leaders develop and practice their activism skills at university today in order to more effectively build a freer future. This is our theory of social change.
